The Southern Overlook.
Captain J. C. Rawling, of this city, who is on a trip South, on board the steamer "Springer," Cincinnati to New Orleans, writes to his wife from New Orleans, that the "overflow" scenes from Memphis down are appalling. A meeting of the passengers was held on board the steamer on the 3d, at which resolutions were passed for publication in various papers, setting forth the impression of the passengers touching the extent of the dire calamity that has overtaken the unfortunate people of the overflowed regions, and the necessity for the most energetic measures of relief on the part of the Government and people. The Captain says that in many places the overflow is from fifty to one hundred miles in extent. Thousands of people are living on improvised rafts and flatboats, and are exposed to constant dangers as well as to numberless inconveniences. Their situation is truly distressing. The facts are of course known to the Government, and it is some consolation to see that the Secretary of War is sending liberal supplies in the way of food to the suffering people. Of course there are many ways that the Government cannot relieve, and disease and death must be the result to very many whose homes are now on the water or on the bare ground on spots not overflowed. For these there is no adequate help. Mere food is only a partial alleviation. They need a root over their heads, need clothing, need medicines, and when the water subsides will need something to live on until they can plant. The whole country is ready to contribute to the help of these poor people if the Government will only indicate ways and means of doing so. Meetings will be held in every city and town, and money or supplies sent forward. The North has never yet failed to respond to a cry of distress from the South.

As to the permanent consequences of this flood, no adequate idea can now be formed. The present calamity is certainly very great. It is to be hoped that there is a silver lining behind the cloud that is not yet seen. It must result in some early and decided steps on the part of Congress on behalf of a plan for at least the partial prevention of these wide spread overflows. The outlet system is present being vigorously pressed at Washington as at once the most natural, permanent and inexpensive of all the plans submitted. It is either this or else immense embankments equal to the famous Chinese walls, in the shape of levees. To build the latter would require one hundred millions of dollars and several years time, and when built would be in the estimation of engineers of high standing worse than useless. They would cause the bed of the Mississippi river to constantly fill up, and would necessitate the same embankments along all the tributary streams, or else cause their back water to overflow the country through which they pass. Indeed, so experienced a man as Capt. Cowdon, looks upon such a plan as fraught with great peril to the future of the Mississippi Valley. Therefore he favors the outlet system.

All this, however, is only remotely germane to the present wide-spread calamity in the lower Mississippi country. Still it presents a question that must be now, more than ever, one of absorbing interest to all the people of that country, and indeed to the people of the whole country. It seems like a mockery that a land so fair, and of such boundless capacity for sustaining a large and prosperous population, should by reason of these liabilities to overflow be almost uninhabitable. The engineering science of the country should be exhausted to find a remedy more or less complete.

Free Trade Theories.
There is a class of men in this country who are known as doctrinaires in free trade. They have abstract ideas that are very plausible. One of these professors made a speech here in Wheeling some years ago in which he undertook to prove that what had conducted to wealth in England would, if applied to the United States, conduce to our national growth and wealth. These men assume that the free trade principle is one of universal application—that it is, in other words, a mathematical sort of principle, and as such fundamental and unexceptionable in its working. All that is necessary is to apply it, and its beneficial results will follow logically in any country, old or new.

Congressman Kelley, chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means in Congress, has undertaken to show the errors of these doctrinaires by an appeal to facts and to history. To this end he has furnished a rather remarkable article for the March number of the International Review, entitled "a science based on assumptions." In this article he takes up the very easy way he has alluded to—the case of England—and shows what her past relations have been in free trade and what they are to-day. Our intelligent contemporary—the Kansas City Journal—published though it is in the heart of a region that has been sedulously worked up by the free traders against the manufacturing districts of this country—is strongly impressed by the array of facts advanced by Judge Kelley, and furnishes its readers a very fair compendium of them.

England is to-day the great free trade advocate of the world. How and why she has become such an interesting story. To show the consistency of England, Judge Kelley quotes from some of her statutes and resolutions in regard to the American colonies. When the North American colonies first attempted to manufacture, the House of Commons in 1710 passed a resolution that "the erecting of manufactories in the colonies had a tendency to lessen their dependence on Great Britain." In 1723 the exportation of hats from provinces to provinces was prohibited. In 1750 the erection of any mill or other engine for spinning or rolling iron was prohibited, but pig iron was allowed to be imported into England, duty free, that it might there be manufactured and sent back again. These were only a few of the laws made by England in the same direction. It was free trade or protection with that na-
